To whom this can relate: I write to recommend Amy Petty for your business program. As General Manager of Plum Products, where Amy currently works, I interact with her almost every day. I am very familiar with her position in the company and her record of excellence. I also granted to my direct manager and other members of the Human Resources Department regarding her performance before writing this recommendation. Amy joined our human resources department three years ago as a human resources officer. In her first year with Plum Products, Amy worked at the HR project management team, which developed a system to increase employee satisfaction by assigning employees jobs for which they are best suited. Amy's creative recommendations, which included methods of surveying employees and assessing productivity, proved invaluable in the development of our system. Our organisation's results are measurable - turnover was reduced by 15 percent per year after the system was implemented, and 83 percent of employees reported being more satisfied with their work than they were in the previous year. On her 18-month anniversary with Plum Products, Amy was promoted to Human Resources Team Leader. This promotion was a direct result of her contribution to the AP project, as well as her exempla usenterious performance review. As head of the human resources group, Amy plays an important role in coordinating our administrative functions. She leads a team of five other human resources professionals. Her duties include working with senior management to develop and implement strategies for companies and departments, entrust tasks to the personnel team and resolve team conflicts. The members of Amy's team look to her coaching, and she often serves a mentor role. Last year, we changed the organisational structure of our human resources departments. Some employees felt a natural resistance to change and showed varying levels of frustration, alienation and disorientation. Amy's intuitive nature alerted her to these questions and helped her help change process. She provided leadership, support and training as necessary to ensure a smooth transition and improve motivation, morale, satisfaction with other members of her team. I consider Amy a valuable member of our organization and would like to see her get the extra education she needs to progress her leadership career. I think she would be well suited for your program and could promote in many ways. With respect, Adam Brecker, General Manager of Plum Products Let's examine the reasons why this sample recommendation letter works. The letter writer defines his connection to Amy, explains why he is qualified to write a recommendation and endorses Amy's position in the organization. The recommendations should provide concrete examples of achievements. This letter states that mentioning Amy's role and achievements in the AP project. Admissions committees want to see professional growth – this letter shows that by mentioning Amy's promotion. Leadership potential and capabilities are important, especially for individuals who apply for top business programs. This letter not only indicates that Amy is in a leading position, but also provides an example of her leadership abilities. To whom it can relate: It is with great joy and enthusiasm that I am writing to approve Alice's application for your program. For the past 25 years at Blackmore University, I have been an ethics professor as well as a mentor to many interns and business students. I hope that my perspective will make you useful in evaluating this extraordinary candidate. My first contact with Alice was in the summer of 1997, when she organized a summer conference outside los angeles for teenagers interested in communication skills. Within a week, Alice presented the material with such lightness and humor that she set the tone for the entire workshop. Her creative ideas for presentations and activities were inventive and entertaining; they were also amazingly effective. With actors from different backgrounds, there was often conflict, and sometimes confrontation. By setting limits, Alice managed to respond consistently with respect and compassion. The experience had a profound impact on the participants, and because of Alice's extraordinary skills and professionalism, she has invited many schools to offer similar management seminars. At a time when I know Alice, she has distinguished herself as a conscientious and energetic pioneer in the areas of leadership and leadership. I have tremendous respect for her teaching and leadership skills and have the pleasure of working with her on many occasions. I know about Alice's continued interest in programs related to leadership and leadership development. She has introduced many impressive programs for her peers, and it's an honor to consult with her on some of these projects. I have the greatest admiration for her work. Your program sounds perfect for Alice's needs and talents. She will come to you with the qualities of a natural leader: sincerity, intelligence and integrity. She will also give her interest in scientific research and programme development. Just as importantly, she will come with enthusiasm for both learning and networking, as well as a resolute desire to understand new theories and ideas. It's exciting to think about how she could promote your program. I urge you to carefully consider Alice, who is, quite simply, the most remarkable young leader I have ever met. Sincerely, Professor Aries, St. James Blackmore University Obtaining Letters of Recommendation for The University is only part of the application process, but these letters are an essential component. You may feel that you have no control over the content of these letters or you may wonder who to ask. Asking for a recommendation letter is daunting, but you need to consider the challenge that your professors and others are faced with in writing these letters. Read on to learn how to ask for a letter of recommendation in a way that will get results. You can ask for a letter of recommendation in person or by (snail mail) letter. Don't ask through a quick email that can feel impersonal and stands a great chance to lose or delete, or even find your way to a dreaded spam folder. Even if you're personally asking, provide a potential guide to suggesting a letter that contains basic information, including your current CV, if you don't have one, create it, and create links to the universities you're applying for. Briefly mention the specific qualities and academic skills that you would like your reference to mention. No matter how well you think your pass knows you, remember that this person is a professor, consultant, or even an employer who has many things on her plate. All you can do gives her more information about you can make her letter writing work easier, and it can help point the letter in the direction you want it to go, ensuring that it includes the points you want your inseminator to take. Be prepared to discuss the type of grade you are looking for, the programs you are applying for, how you came to your choices, goals for graduate study, future efforts, and why you believe that a faculty member, consultant, or employer is a good candidate to write a letter on your behalf. While you are applying for university, keep in mind some general advice when requesting a recommendation letter for any purpose, be it graduate school, work, or even an internship. Online job search engine Monster.com that when you ask for a suggestion letter, just pop the question. Don't beat around the bush; come right out and ask. Say something like: I'm applying for an internship, and I need to include two letters of recommendation. Would you be willing to write one for me? I need it on the 20th. Suggest a few talking points: With a professor, how it might be best to do this in a letter. But if you ask a consultant or employer, consider giving these points verbally and succinctly. Say something like: Thank you for agreeing to write a letter of recommendation for me. I was hoping that you could mention the study that I was doing and the contribution that I made to the grant proposal the organisation submitted last month. So what else does it take to ensure your recommendor write hard letters to you? A good, useful letter of recommendation will discuss you in detail and provide evidence to support these statements. The information you provide will hopefully ensure that your recommendation to recommend this information is included in a direct but comprehensive way. No one can talk to more authority about a student's academic abilities than a former professor or instructor. But a good letter of recommendation goes beyond class grades. The best referrals offer detailed examples of how you have grown as an individual and provide insight into how you stand out from your peers. A well-written letter of recommendation must also be associated with the program you are applying for. For example, if you are applying for an online graduate program and you have been successful in previous distance learning courses, you might ask for professor referrals. Good letters of recommendation are written by people who know and are guaranteed interest in your success. They offer detailed and relevant examples that show why you would be well suited to a graduate program. A bad letter of recommendation, on the contrary, is vague and indifferent. Take the necessary steps to graduate programs you are applying for do not receive this type of letter for you. You.
